

95% of your market can't buy from you today.

Here's what that means for how you run demand gen →

It's called the 95-5 rule.

Ehrenberg-Bass Institute research: at any moment, roughly 5% of B2B buyers are actively in-market. The other 95% aren't ready yet.

So why does most demand gen only talk to the 5%?

Bottom-of-funnel offers. “Book a demo.” Retargeting the same warm leads, on repeat.

The other 95% aren't lost. They're future pipeline.

They're not ignoring you — they're not buying anything, from anyone, right now.

Build category memory.

Show up before the need exists, so you're the name they recall when it finally does.

Then catch the 5% when they raise a hand.

In-market signals plus a fast, obvious next step — that's where conversion budget belongs.

95% of your market can't buy today.
The other 5% are why you need both plays running.
