

Your best leads never touched your website first

The dark funnel, explained in 6 slides.

The dark funnel is buyer research you can't see.

Slack communities. Private DMs. A screenshot forwarded in a group chat. No UTM, no session, no record.

A buyer asks their peer group:

“anyone used this?”

Three people name you. The buyer visits your site direct, already convinced. Analytics logs it as “direct traffic.” It was word of mouth.

Your attribution model missed the moment that mattered.

By the time a lead fills out a form, the real decision often already happened — off-platform, unattributed.

You can't track dark social. You can earn it.

Be the thing worth screenshotting: a sharp post, a useful tool, a founder POV people actually forward.

Show up in the rooms you can't measure.

Communities, newsletters, podcasts, peer circles — where buyers actually talk before they ever search.

Your best leads never touch your website first.
